

Cell phone usage on commercial aircraft should not be allowed. As a flight attendant for a major commercial airline, I feel it would add undue stress to an already stressful cabin. Cell phones could also allow terrorists to coordinate plans of action more effectively. The NPRM would require flight attendants to police the use of cell phone usage, compromising our ability to maintain a safe, secure, cabin environment and emergency evacuations. In closing, there is no hard evidence that cell phone usage on aircraft does not interfere with navigational equipment.
